With Tuition Soaring More Choose Low Cost Work Experience Accredited Degree

Yes you can get college credit for work experience, even earn an entire work experience accredited degree without leaving home.

It is hard enough to get a job these days but getting one without a college degree is almost impossible. Tuition is rising daily. What can you do if you don't have the time or money to go back to school?

<http://www.TheCareerPeople.com> offers a low cost solution.

Three US and at least one foreign based fully accredited universities will help students earn a degree based on what they have learned at work, in travels or hobbies.

Succeeding in the field is what getting an education is all about. Knowledge obtained outside the classroom can be used to get a degree. The cost is pennies on the dollar compared to the top tuition rates.

The average college graduate will earn $1 million more than his high school counterpart over the course of a lifetime. TheCareerPeople.com helps individuals get a piece of that pie without entering a college classroom.

In addition to work experience these universities will accept credits earned previously at other institutions. A common misconception is that once a student does not finish their course work, any credits earned are useless. While not all colleges and universities allow credit for past courses many do. Some have no limit to the number that can be transferred.

Do not confuse this with bogus degrees that you can buy supposedly based on life experience. A life experience college degrees does not exist, however, with a work experience accredited degree students have been awarded the college degrees (bachelor, masters or doctorates) they once only dreamed of.
